

A Real Story that will change your life...

My dad was born in the slums of India where eating two complete meals a day was a cause for celebration. He did not have to go barefoot every day, but when he did wear shoes, they were worn-out and did not fit. When the rains came, the mud-roof of his family's home leaked sludge into the house. Rather than accepting this life of poverty as a permanent sentence, he immigrated to the United States with just $8. Now he lives in one of the wealthiest neighborhoods in the country and the size of his kitchen is bigger than the entire house where his family of eight used to live in India.

What enabled him and other immigrants to rise from the poorest state to the richest of financial levels? Is it culture, religion, positive thinking, commitment, planning, or something more? Perhaps a combination of unique experiences and cultural differences affects the way in which individuals raise their children. I am proud to have a father who did not confine his knowledge and unique experiences within the family, as he has written 11 books so children and parents can learn the valuable lessons that I learned directly from my immigrant parents.

I was born in the United States and I understand the needs of the time. I would like to pass on these secrets to my fellow Americans and to the rest of the world.
